The Defences of the Delaware River during the Revolution

BY

HENRY HOBART BELLAS, L.L. B.

CAPTAIN U. S. ARMY

THE defences of the Delaware for the protection of Philadelphia in the early provincial period were few and exceedingly primitive. Of the rude forts erected on the Delaware by the early Swedes and Dutch during the 17th century in the locality of New Castle and Wilmington, viz., Forts Nassau, Christina, Casimer and others, with their constantly changing possession, we will not now stop to speak. The old Wicaco block-house, which also stood near the river, and it is believed about the site afterwards occupied by the Swedish church, Gloria Dei, on Swanson south of Christian street, was built in 1669; principally, however, for defence against the Indians. This was torn down in 1698, and the church dedicated on July 2, 1700. Coming down, then, to a later period, we find that in April, 1748, the first battery, consisting of thirteen guns, was erected by the Associators for the protection of the city against French and Spanish privateers, at Anthony Atwood's wharf, under "Society Hill," between Pine and Cedar, and near the present Lombard street. The breastwork was constructed of timber and planks eight to ten feet in thickness and filled in with earth. Much of the work was done by the volunteer labor of the city carpenters, and the entire fortification was rapidly completed and its armament of six and nine-pounders mounted in place.

There was a great scarcity of cannon, however, we are informed by the authorities of the time. All the old and hitherto neglected pieces lying about the wharves were overhauled and seventy or more found serviceable for an emergency. Application was made at the same time to Governors Shirley of Massachusetts and Clinton of New York for the loan of some additional pieces. The latter sent a number of eighteen-pounders with their carriages, which were brought overland from New York. The managers of the lottery which had been organized for the purpose of raising £3000 for defense, at the same time sent to England for additional cannon for another battery, 400 feet in length, styled the Grand battery, which was located below the city and beyond the Old Swede's church, on ground afterwards occupied by the United States Navy Yard. Although the Associator companies mounted guard here during the early summer for the protection of the river, it was not until August of this same year that the pieces applied for to England were received. The proprietaries of the Province also responded to the request of the city corporation by sending over thirteen pieces (prophetic number) in November, 1750, which were also mounted, making a total of upwards of fifty pieces of 18-, 24- and 32-pounders. One of the largest, a new 32-pounder, was presented by the "Schuylkill Fishing Company," and in succeeding years was known by the name of "Old Schuylkill." Its trunnions were broken off when finally abandoning the city to the British twenty-seven years after, and it was left lying in the ditch at Fort Mifflin, whither it had been removed. Here it rested till a few years since, when it was reclaimed and by direction of the United States War Department presented to the celebrated "State in Schuylkill," who zealously to-day guard it as a relic of the antiquity of their Association.

All these early colonial defenses along the Delaware near the city, had been abandoned at the time of the British occupation. Fort Mifflin, then called Mud Fort, and located below the junction of the Delaware and Schuylkill Rivers; Fort Mercer, at Red Bank opposite on the Jersey shore, and the fortifications at Billingsport farther down, were still all garrisoned by American troops. The river at the same points was also effectually blockaded by the American fleet, consisting of over sixty vessels of all sizes, sorts and conditions, under the command of Commodore John Hazlewood, together with a strong chevaux-de-frise of logs, constructed in September of the preceding year across the main channel on the Jersey side, and reaching from Billingsport to the island of the same name opposite. Of the first named of these defenses (the present Fort Mifflin), its construction had been originally authorized by the Assembly as early as 1762, when there were fears of a war with Spain, and £15,000 voted therefor. This appropriation, however, had been diverted for other purposes, and a new act was passed nine years later (1771) appropriating an additional sum of £15,000 in letters of credit. The commissioners in charge of the work were Joseph Galloway, Benjamin Chew, Michael Hillegas, Thomas Cadwalader, and several others. They purchased a small island in the Delaware, about eight miles below the city, owned by Galloway and known as Great Mud Island (one of two of that name), which became thereafter known as Fort Island. Application was made to General Gage, then in command, for an engineer officer to construct the work. He appointed the skillful Captain John Montross of the British army, who superintended during the next two years the construction, without any anticipation of the use to which it would eventually be put in resisting the power of Great Britain. By a still stronger coincidence, this same officer was also Howe's chief engineer in the attack on the same fortification less than half a dozen years later.

The site for Fort Mercer opposite was originally selected immediately after the commencement of the Revolution (in July, 1775), when the Committee of Safety, with Franklin as its President, went down to Red Bank with a number of engineers to decide upon its location. In the following year (December, 1776), General Putnam, who had been appointed Military Governor of Philadelphia by Washington, began new works (with Kosciusko for his engineer officer) at Red Bank, opposite the fort on Mud Island, and protecting the upper chevaux-de-frise in the river. This defense, known as Fort Mercer, though in the State of New Jersey, was especially constructed under the authority of the Pennsylvania Council of Safety on the recommendation of Major Thomas Proctor of the Artillery, made to the Council on December 23, 1776, though built under the directions, as stated, of Kosciusko, and afterwards of Col. John Bull in the next year.

Du Coudray, a French engineer, who, with General Mifflin, had been delegated by Congress to superintend the completion of all the works along the Delaware, at the time of the British advance on the city, had reported, while commending, with a few exceptions, the manner in which the works had been constructed, that he was of the decided opinion that these at Fort Mercer, like the works at Billingsport, farther down, were too extensive for proper defense and could not be made of much use in obstructing the entire chan-and river forces. At Billingsport, Robert Smith, under orders of the Committee of Safety in 1776, commenced to build an extensive series of fortifications which had been also planned by Kosciusko (at the same time he had laid out those at Fort Mercer), to protect the lower chevaux-de-frise in the river. Colonel Bull and Blaithe Jones continued the construction, the former as commandant and the latter as chief engineer. Though a considerable number of men were employed, the works were still unfinished in June, 1777, and were reported as requiring yet several months to complete them.

Considerably farther down the river, at New Castle, was also a battery which had been originally erected here in 1748, as well as Fort Christiana, built the same year as the "Association Battery," and on the site of the old Swedish Fort Christina at Wilmington.

All these defenses, however, were reported by General Mifflin in his report to Congress just prior to the British occupation, as in an unsatisfactory condition. Those on Fort Island were badly constructed, one-half the guns being so placed as to be virtually nel of the river. He recommended the removal of nearly all the guns therefrom to Billingsport, leaving only two or three at Red Bank as sufficient for the protection of the chevaux-de-frise. This latter, originally devised by Dr. Franklin, was likewise defended by the improvised Delaware flotilla of gun-boats, galleys, xebecs, floating batteries, fire-ships and fire-rafts, the last named being intended to fire the enemy's shipping. This navy, constructed with great rapidity by the American ship builders and controlled by the Committee of Safety, was, as stated, under the immediate command of Commodore Hazlewood, who had superseded Seymour, enfeebled by age, and had the celebrated Dr. Benjamin Rush for its fleet-surgeon. Though its services, both before and during the British occupation were valuable, it scarcely repaid the Committee of Safety for its construction, either in prizes or in security against the enemy, although it cost over £100,000 per annum to maintain. Much of its efficiency, as we will see later on, was lost by jealousy and by conflict of authority between the commanding officers of the land useless. At Red Bank the river was too wide for any serious execution by the guns of Fort Mercer. The works at Billingsport were on too extensive a scale and still remained, as stated, unfinished. The Navy Board arranged to flood Hog Island, and the meadows immediately below and surrounding Fort Mifflin; to construct a bridge of boats from the latter to Province Island, and to throw a garrison into a fortification at Darby Creek. It also sunk vessels in the main channel of the Delaware to block navigation.

Such was the condition of the defenses of Philadelphia, when Howe, with his army, occupied the city on the 26th day of September, 1777, some two weeks after the battle of Brandywine.

The British general's position, however, as has been well said, was one to excite the liveliest anxieties of a prudent commander of an invading force. To the north of the city was the main army of the Americans under Washington, and which had just shown itself bold enough and strong enough also, to attack the enemy in his fortified stronghold. On the south were the forts, still held by the Continental troops, the galleys and gun-boats, the chevaux-de-frise and other obstructions in the river, shutting him out from the navigation of the Delaware and the provisioning of his army; the militia of New Jersey patrolled all the east side of the river, while on the west side of the Schuylkill the country was held and guarded by the Pennsylvania State troops under General Potter. General Howe saw at a glance that the river must be opened at once for communication between his army and the British fleet lying in the river opposite Chester, or he would be forced to abandon the city he had but just gained; since, hemmed in as he was on all sides, it would be impossible to supply his army. It has been admitted that had Gates not withheld, apparently from envious motives, the reinforcements called for immediately after Burgoyne's surrender, two brigades of fresh troops would have aided materially, and in all probability have prevented these river defenses from being overcome and forced the result indicated, viz., the immediate evacuation of Philadelphia by the enemy. The colonial defenses, alluded to as having been abandoned by the Americans, were already occupied and strengthened by the British. A redoubt was constructed at the intersection of

Reed and Swanson streets, the old "Association Battery" was manned with three or four guns, another was built at Swanson and Christian streets, and still another in the upper part of the city on a wharf above Cohocksink Creek; all manned with twelve-pounders and howitzers.

The American gun-boat flotilla which, with the ships of war "Montgomery" and "Aetna," under command of Commodore Andrew Caldwell and Captain Thomas Reed, had, on May 8, 1776, attacked the British frigates "Roebuck," "Liverpool," and their tenders off the mouth of Christina Creek, running the former ashore, capturing a brig belonging to the squadron, maintaining the fight with spirit until dark, and pursuing the enemy's vessels as far as New Castle, gave promise in this activity of accomplishing good results in the future.

HEADQUARTERS VETERAN CORPS

DUQUESNE GREYS, EIGHTEENTH INFANTRY, N. G. P.

Pittsburg, Pa., February 26, 1902.

It is with deep sorrow and regret that the Board of Management of the Corps announces to their Comrades and Friends the death of our beloved Commander, General Presley Neville Guthrie, who has been summoned to answer the Roll Call of the Omnipotent Commander of all. His record in the Civil War and National Guard is too well known to require repetition, but we all remember that as Adjutant, Major, Lieutenant-Colonel, and Colonel of the Duquesne Greys, Eighteenth Regiment, his time, his experience, his purse and his affections were always at the service of his favorite Regiment, and that it is owing to him that the Eighteenth Regiment is now in existence. In the reorganization of the N. G. P. in the 70's, his advice was constantly sought by Gov. Hartranft. In the riots of '77, it was owing to his cool head and good judgment that the Duquesne Greys, Eighteenth Regiment, was the only Regiment in the State that maintained its organization intact from first to last, and accomplished their duty without firing a shot, as Major General Snowden acknowledged.

During his last interview with his Adjutant, some two weeks before his death, he instructed him to say to members of the Corps: "Tell the boys I cannot thank them enough for electing me Commander, it has done me good. I am very sorry I could not be at the last two meetings, but I hope in a few months to be strong enough to be with them once more."

In his loss all who ever served under him feel that they have lost a friend, but remember "to live in hearts we leave behind us, is not to die."

THE general impression throughout the Third Brigade is that the new National Guard Bill, as amended, should be encouraged, as it is bound to create a betterment in the Guard.

SEVERAL of the Companies in the Second Brigade pay an annual rental of $600 for the use of their quarters. The regular allowance from the State for that purpose is $200, leaving a difference of $400 to be raised by the members of the Company.

THE inspections just completed in the Thirteenth Regiment, by Major William P. Clarke, have been very satisfactory, and the officers of Colonel Watres's command are loud in their praise of the conscientious and up-to-date manner in which Major Clarke conducted the same.

THE new Rifle Range in the Thirteenth Regiment Armory is very complete, having all the latest electrical appliances, etc. Much good should be accomplished during the coming rifle season as the result of the indoor practice. The men have a clear 100-yard range and seem to be deeply interested in their work.

PERHAPS the only non-commissioned staff regularly organized into a social and business body is that of the Thirteenth Infantry. This has been largely accomplished through the untiring efforts of Hospital Steward Joseph Baumeister, who is always on the alert to do something that will create an interest. Recently, they elected Colonel George M. Halstead, Assistant Commissary General, one of their honorary members; in fact, the Colonel has been closely identified with the boys for many years. By way of appreciating their work and to stimulate them to still greater efforts, he is having made at the State Arsenal a special mess tent, 16x20, which he will present to them for the coming encampment.

THE National Guard Association of Philadelphia held a meeting at the Second Regiment Armory on Saturday evening, March 22d, and passed resolutions unanimously endorsing the Military Bill, now before the House of Representatives. The resolutions also embodied a request to Pennsylvania Congressmen to vote for the bill. Col. Edward E. Brinton, Assistant Adjutant General Second Brigade, N. G. N. Y., explained in detail the merits of the bill, which proved very interesting to the many officers assembled. During the evening Major Thomas Dolan, A. D. C., on General Schall's staff, wanted to know what effect the new bill would have on the respective brigade staffs. Would there be a repetition of their dismemberment, as in 1898, or would they be retained intact? Colonel Brinton could not clearly state this, as it would largely depend upon conditions in the time of a United States call. He thought where several of the smaller states had only a regiment or two, the original staffs might be done away with. Colonel Brinton was the special guest of Colonel Henry T. Dechert, Second Infantry.

Personal Mention

Lieut.-Colonel Fred. W. Stillwell, Thirteenth Regiment, is preparing a form of commitment blank to be used at Summary Courts Martial.

Captain James Clinton Kenny, Company B, Ninth Infantry, is planning an entertainment for the benefit of the Company, which promises to be unique and extensive.

Colonel C. Bow Dougherty has written every United States Senator and Representative from Pennsylvania, asking their earnest support of the new Army Bill. Many of the replies are very encouraging.

It is stated that owing to business pressure Captain George Evans, Company L, Ninth Infantry, stationed at Nanticoke, contemplates leaving the service. Captain Evans succeeded Major Dewey.

Captain Elmer K. Roop, former Adjutant of the Fifth Infantry, one of the best-known officers in the State, promises to re-enter the Guard in the near future. Captain Roop is a journalist located in Altoona.

The review tendered General Paul A. Oliver, a distinguished soldier of the Rebellion, by Colonel Dougherty's command, on Friday, March 7th, was a brilliant success. After the ceremony, General Oliver presented the marksmen's decorations for the season of 1901.

Major William S. Millar, Assistant Adjutant General, Third Brigade, who has been seriously ill for several months, is convalescing. The Major is an old member of the Thirteenth Regiment and very much interested in its welfare. Mrs. Miller a short time ago paid a visit to Company B's quarters in the new Armory, and it is stated promised the boys that their quarters should be handsomely frescoed and decorated at her expense.

Quite a competition, of a friendly nature, however, has arisen in connection with the vacant position of First Lieutenant and Commissary of the Thirteenth Infantry. The applicants are former Captain Robert Horn, Easton; Hospital Steward Jos. Baumeister, Sergeant Major J. M. Edwards, and Commissary Sergeant Fred. T. Koehler. Colonel Watres is carefully considering the respective merits of the several candidates and will shortly announce the appointment.

In General Orders No. 2, Headquarters Fourth Regiment Infantry, Colonel O'Neill states that this inspection will be rigid in every particular, and that Company Commanders will endeavor to bring their Companies up to a high standard, thus maintaining the proud record this regiment enjoys for general efficiency. The Companies yet to be inspected in this command are Company H, in Lebanon, April 1st; Company C, Columbia, April 2d; Company K, Lancaster, April 3d; Company G, Pine Grove, April 4th; Company F, Pottsville, April 5th; Company I, Reading, April 8th; Company A, Reading, April 9th. Colonel O'Neill with his staff will attend all of these inspections.

NAVAL MILITIA NOTES

With the coming of spring the Naval Militia are beginning to get their boat-gear in sides for work on the river; and after their inspection, the middle of next month, expect to lay aside for another four or five months all hard work at infantry and artillery drills and turn their attention instead to the "seamanship" branches.

The U. S. S. "Shearwater," which, like all vessels, requires a good deal of painting and general putting to rights before going into commission, is to go down to the Navy Yard in a few days to be put into dry dock to have her periodical hull inspection and get the barnacles scraped off and be given a coat of "McGinnis's Green." And after that is all done the Battalion will again be ready to start the usual practice trips down to Lewes and Cape May. But at present the militiamen are "boning up" guard duty, in which they have recently learned they are to be inspected by the Inspector General, and are practicing the military "Halt, who is there?" which will be followed later in the season with the more nautical "Sail Ho" and "Boat Ahoy."

Colonel C. Bow Dougherty, Ninth Infantry, is particularly fortunate in being surrounded by an able, popular and representative set of officers and, at this time, we deem it very fitting to give a brief sketch of the several gentlemen, who are serving the regiment with distinction.

MAJOR JAMES A. DEWEY

Major James A. Dewey, who was recently elected to fill the junior field position, is a thorough and efficient officer, much respected in the community in which he resides. He was born in Bradford County, Pa., in 1860, and enlisted in Company A of the Ninth Regiment, May 6, 1889. On July 15th of the same year, he was appointed corporal. His earnest efforts in promoting the best interests of the Company soon won for him the chevrons of first sergeant, which appointment he received on May 1, 1890. His term expired on May 6, 1892, when he retired from the active service of the State, but he always retained a deep interest in the Regiment.

At the breaking out of the Spanish-American War, when President McKinley called for 125,000 volunteers, Major Dewey immediately organized, at Wanamie, a small mining village, an infantry company of Luzerne's sturdiest sons and offered their services to Governor Hastings. The company was mustered into the National Guard of Pennsylvania, June 25, 1898, as Company F, of the Seventh Regiment. Jas. A. Dewey was unanimously elected Captain. When the reorganization of the Guard took place, June 13, 1899, the company was transferred to the Ninth Infantry, as Company L. His untiring efforts as a Captain made for him many friends in the line and they unanimously elected him Major, on January 25, 1902.

By profession Major Dewey is a teacher, and for the past eighteen years he has been Superintendent of Schools in Newport Township, Luzerne County. He graduated at the Mansfield State Normal School, and also studied at Taylor University and the University of Michigan, receiving the degree of Ph. B. from the former institution. Major Dewey is also actively interested in Masonic and Patriotic Order work. He is a member of Dien le Veut Commandery No. 45, Knights Templar, of Wilkes-Barre, and is superintendent of the M. E. Sunday-school of Wanamie.

FASHION'S SEASIDE SHOW

The Famed Easter Sunday Boardwalk Parade

Not many years ago some venturesome persons started the idea of spending Easter-tide at the Seashore.

'Twas not long ere numbers of fashion's votaries learned that a day or more spent in the breezy exhilarating salt air was the best of nature's tonics, and prepared them for the future demands of society and business.

Consequently of late years the grand boardwalk at Atlantic City has been so thronged at Easter by those wishing to see or be seen as to cast far in the background the former noted Easter Sunday parades of Philadelphia, New York and other places. While fashion's whims attract numbers to Atlantic City, numerous others take advantage of the occasion to spend a few days at Cape May or Ocean City.

To accommodate its patrons, the Philadelphia & Reading route has added the following fast express trains with Pullman Parlor Car attached to its regular service, from and to Chestnut Street and South Street Ferries, Philadelphia:

For Atlantic City, Sunday, 30th inst., leave Philadelphia 8.00 A. M. Returning, leave Atlantic City 9.30 P. M.

For Cape May and Ocean City, leave Philadelphia, March 29th, 1.30 P. M., March 30th, 8.30 A. M. Returning, leave Cape May and Ocean City, March 30th, 5.30 P. M.

Leave New York for Atlantic City, March 29th, 1.30 P. M., and returning, leave Atlantic City, March 30th, 5.30 P. M.

CAPTAIN GEORGE R. McLEAN

COLONEL WATRES WORKING FOR PROPER ARMORY FACILITIES IN THE GUARD

The great question which is now agitating the Guard throughout the Division is that of proper armory facilities. Pittsburg, the Western metropolis of the State, with its two regiments of infantry and battery of artillery, is practically without a structure adequate to care for the arms and equipments entrusted to the care of the several organizations. Colonel Louis A. Watres, commanding the Thirteenth Infantry, wrestled with this problem for several years in the city of Scranton, and to-day the magnificent, fortress-like Armory stands out as a monument to his indefatigable efforts. He is fully conversant with the armory situation, and like several other regimental commanders, is trying to bring about legislation to properly house the citizen soldiery of our great Commonwealth.

CAPTAIN GEORGE R. McLEAN

Another popular and public officer is Captain George R. McLean, Quartermaster of the Regiment. This office, especially in the State service, is an unenviable position, and the members of the Ninth Regiment are to be congratulated in having a thorough, up-to-date officer at the head of this department. Captain McLean was born in Wilkes-Barre, January 24, 1873, and attended the public schools and Harry Hillman Academy of Wilkes-Barre. His military training began as a cadet in the Cheltenham Military Academy, which is regarded as one of the best institutions of its kind in the United States. During his course at Cheltenham, he was the chum and room-mate of Cadet Charles S. Miller, now Major and Aide-de-Camp on the Division Staff, the son of our esteemed Major General Charles Miller. In 1895, Captain McLean graduated from Lafayette College, and then took up the study of law with William S. McLean. He was admitted to the Luzerne County Bar in July, 1896, and since that time has been in active practice. He was elected to Select Council to represent the Tenth Ward of the City of Wilkes-Barre in February, 1899. He was appointed a member of the Board of Examiners of the Luzerne County Bar, and at the present time is chairman of this Board. In November, 1901, he was elected County Controller, which position he is filling with great credit.

He enlisted in Company D of the Ninth Regiment, March, 1896, and soon thereafter won the corporal chevrons. He was elected second lieutenant of Company F, September, 1897, was acting adjutant from November, 1897, to March, 1898. He entered the United States service as second lieutenant of Company F, and was appointed Aide-de-Camp on the staff of General John N. Andrews, U. S. A., May 21, 1898. He was mustered out in October of the same year. In February, 1899, when Company F was reorganized, he was elected Captain, and in April, 1900, was appointed Quartermaster of the Regiment.

He is president and director of several corporations, and in social life a member of the Westmoreland and other clubs. Captain McLean is to be married to Miss Barber, of Wilkes-Barre, on April 2, 1902. He has the best wishes of his brother officers, not only of the Ninth Regiment, but throughout the Brigade and Division.

LIEUTENANT FREDERICK CHARLES BENNETT

Another of the sterling officers of Colonel Dougherty's official family is the Inspector of Rifle Practice, First Lieutenant Frederick Charles Bennett, who was born at West Pittston, Pa., December 31, 1876. He was educated at the West Pittston High School. After a three years' course, he graduated, second in class in military tactics, from the military school of Manlius, N. Y., which secured his registration in the War Department, Washington, D. C., and in the Adjutant General's Office, Harrisburg, Pa. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, he was commissioned as First Lieutenant, Company C, Ninth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry; this, upon the recommendation of General Thomas J. Stewart, Adjutant General of Pennsylvania. He was mustered out of the United States service in October, 1888, and at that time, was practically responsible for the proper preparation of the intricate paper work required, owing to the physical disability of his immediate superior.

Lieutenant Bennett is a member of the Wyoming Monument Association, the New England Society of Northeastern Pennsylvania, and a Companion of the Military Order of Foreign Wars and of the Military Service Institution.

S. B. BENNETT,

Honorary Member Ninth Infantry

One of the representative and popular military men in the Third Brigade District is S. B. Bennett, of West Pittston, Pa. He is greatly interested in our citizen soldiery and one of the ardent admirers of the Ninth Infantry; his son, Frederick Charles Bennett, being Inspector of Rifle Practice on Colonel Dougherty's staff. Mr. Bennett was born in 1840, and passed his youth upon a farm. In 1861, he enlisted in the 48th Regiment, New York Volunteers, Colonel James Perry, which command was with General Thomas W. Sherman's successful expedition to Port Royal, S. C. Later, he was in Norfolk, Va., and became a member of the Norfolk Brigade Band. Upon being mustered out, in 1865, he obtained employment with the Fall Brook Coal Company, at Corning, N. Y. In March, 1872, he removed to Pittston, Pennsylvania, taking charge of the mining operations of the Butler Colliery Company, and until recently was engaged in anthracite coal mining.

During President Cleveland's administration, he was appointed Postmaster of the city, and during his term was instrumental in establishing the free delivery system in its local postal service. In February, 1894, he was elected Burgess of West Pittston, which position he filled with credit and distinction, and the verdict, on his retirement, was the general expression "the best we ever had." Mr. Bennett is Past Eminent Commander of Wyoming Valley Commandery, Knights Templar, and a prominent member of W. G. Nugent Post, No. 245, Department Pennsylvania G. A. R. He is an original and active trustee of the Pittston Hospital Association, one of the Executive Committee of the Twin Shaft Relief Fund, a Captain L. Denison Stearns, who commanded Company B, of the Ninth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, was born in Wilkes-Barre, December 27, 1875, and spent nearly all his life in his native city. His early education was gained at the Harry Hillman Academy, and he prepared for college at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.; he graduated from Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University, in the class of 1896. He began his business career as Inspector and afterwards served on the Engineer Corps for the Susquehanna Coal Company.

Coming from a military family, he was early imbued with a strong desire to enter the National Guard of Pennsylvania. His first instruction in military tactics, however, was received at Yale. He enlisted as a private in Company D, Ninth Regiment, February 4, 1897, and on the 1st of April of the same year was chosen Second Lieutenant of Company B. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, Lieutenant Stearns volunteered, with his Company, on the field at Mt. Gretna, and was mustered into the service of the United States, with the rank of Captain, on May 11, 1898. He was member of the New England Society, which meets annually in Scranton, of the Wyoming Valley Historical Society and the Wyoming Monument Association.

A pleasant incident is related in connection with Mr. Bennett's visit to Philadelphia, during the Peace Jubilee. With several members of his family, he occupied seats on a grand stand in front of the Masonic Temple. Several members of the Chester County Bar also occupied seats on the stand, and as the Pennsylvania Troops swung into line, they observed Mr. Bennett's enthusiasm and his thorough familiarity with the different commands. It was just at this time that the famous Ninth passed, when the statement was made that he must be the father of that regiment. Mr. Bennett briefly explained his connection and the entire party on the stand agreed to assist Mr. Bennett in applauding "our gallant boys in blue."

CAPTAIN LAZARUS DENISON STEARNS

In connection with the foregoing sketch, "Our State Army and Navy" Journal desires to pay tribute to the memory of one of Pennsylvania's noblest sons, who sacrificed his young life that there should be no halt in American devotion to the interests of humanity, of progress, human liberty and righteousness.

the youngest officer of his grade and command in the First Army Corps, to which his regiment was assigned at Camp George H. Thomas, Chickamauga Park, on arriving there, May 20, 1898. He remained in camp here until August 14th, when he was called home to attend upon his father, Major Irving A. Stearns, one of the organizers of the Ninth Regiment, who was suffering from a pulmonary affection of a serious nature. After remaining at home a few days and his father improving, he decided to return to Chickamauga, where his regiment was preparing to remove to Lexington, Ky. Typhoid fever was prevalent in camp before his departure and, no doubt, the seeds of this dread disease were in his system at the time of his visit to Glen Summit, where his family were then staying, but his desire to be with his command, when changing station, that he might look after his men, rendered him careless of his own physical condition, and he would not yield to what he thought was a temporary indisposition. A rally after he arrived at camp was succeeded by almost a prostration, and on Sunday, August 14th, he was brought North on the hospital train, which had been provided to bring the sick soldiers of Pennsylvania from the camps at Chickamauga and Lexington. But the dread fever had already wasted his physical strength and he succumbed to the disease on Tuesday, September 6, 1898, just one week after his return to Wilkes-Barre.
